Fiona is a highly competent, astute and pragmatic HR Consultant, with over 20 years' experience advising and guiding companies through the minefield of employment law. She is widely regarded for her meticulous attention to detail.

Since joining Darwin Gray in 2006 she has worked closely with the firm's team of employment lawyers to provide clients with a unified and seamless HR and employment law service, offering them practical, hands-on assistance or advising behind-the-scenes, whichever they require.

Her work includes conducting disciplinary and grievance investigations and hearings, including appeals, advising on performance and attendance management, and drafting contracts and handbooks. She also conducts consultations on redundancies, transfers of undertakings (TUPE), and changes to terms and conditions. She is also expert at dealing with problems arising out of holiday and sick pay issues.

Fiona has extensive experience of delivering interactive and informative training sessions, often in collaboration with her lawyer colleagues, combining up-to-date legal best-practice with tools and techniques for its practical implementation.

Fiona works with many clients on a fixed-fee monthly retainer, providing HR advice on a broad range of topics, such that she has become their trusted HR business partner. She also works on fixed fee projects as well as providing advice on an ad hoc basis.
